En relación de ideas con la ley de conservación, el movimiento de los cuerpos en movimiento, como se ilustra en la siguiente figura, se puede explicar con la ley de conservación de la energía, que establece que la energía total de un sistema cerrado es constante. En el caso de un péndulo, la energía potencial se convierte en energía cinética y viceversa, pero la suma de ambas permanece constante.

In general, traditional Chinese culture values harmony, stability, and order. It places a high value on family and social harmony, and a low value on individualism and competition. This is reflected in the Chinese concept of "face" (mianzi), which is a social status or honor that is gained through social interactions. The Chinese also value hierarchy and authority, and this is reflected in the Confucian emphasis on filial piety (xiao) and respect for elders. The Chinese also value education and hard work, and this is reflected in the Confucian emphasis on learning and self-cultivation. According to research by Singapore's leading research and consulting firm, Robert Gordon, the new government, led by a coalition of the main ethnic Chinese political groupings, will still be largely authoritarian. However, it will have no intention of imposing Singapore's authoritarianism on other Asian states. The new state will still be a rather authoritarian, centralised, one-party system, but will be more open and democratic than other Asian states, and more democratic.
